ORATOR OF OLD SCHOOL

Farmers are Impressed with the Simplicity of the Vice-Presidential Candidate

HARRISBURG, Aug. 31.—Conversation and benevolence that make him a character reminiscent of the "good old days," the noble 90's or thereabouts, are the qualities revealed by Senator Charles Curtis, Kansas, Republican nominee for the Vice Presidency.

Coming to the heart of Republican Pennsylvania "Uncle Charley" as he is known to his friends, made the first speech of a national candidate in this State.

His address at Williams Grove, fourteen miles from here and eight miles east of Carlisle, was the opening gun by the G. O. P.

Senator Curtis talked on tariff, on balances of trade, and he discussed appropriations and debt reduction. He digressed a little to tell the women of things the Republican Administration had done for their protection and then went back to hammering low tariff evils.

He didn't mention the liquor issues, although he was surrounded by 30,000 of the most arid voters ever gathered, according to political observers who sat and waited for the Prohibition enforcement reference that did not come.

But while he talked Senator Curtis was giving the audience a chance to study the man who may be the next Vice-President. His delivery of a speech is of the old school. He works a point to a climax, and then, slamming a fist into his palm, he shouts the conclusion in a voice that shakes the amplifiers.

Yesterday he shook them loose. After several Curtis blasts the device failed completely, and thereafter his arguments were echoed only by the trees. Once, when a tooting motor horn annoyed, the Senator paused.

"Tell them to stop that. I can do without it," he said.

At the start of his speech he drew a round of applause by saying he liked Pennsylvania above all else, because it was in Altoona that his wife spent her childhood.

Rain once stopped his talk, but the crowd, after running for shelter, came back and yelled for him to continue. He did, putting out what had been promised as a farm relief plan in the form of reassurance that a new tariff bill, proposed by his party if successful in November, would put the farmer on a plane with those of competing nations.

Sensor Curtis knows his farm problems. He talked freely on subjects like butter and eggs, telling how he thwarted a certain egg-producing combine which had gone to China and wanted to import from its extensive henneries there.

"Why I stumped my State on eggs so much that they began to call me 'Egg Charley,'" he said.

The rally was held in conjunction with the annual Grange picnic and fair. The pavilion from which Senator Curtis spoke looked out upon several carnival tents. In front of one a colored "fire eater" amused a group by consuming yards and yards of flame and smoke, a process which gripped many of the farmers more than the oratorical "fire eating."

Before leaving the Senator stopped to shake hands with a throng which pushed forward to greet him. In each case he spoke individually, asking a question or thanking a well wisher. His contagious smile was ever present.

In appearance it is apparent that he is a plainsman. A dark, almost brown complexion reveals the Indian blood in him, and his grayish hair, round face, and rugged build stamp him as a man who has been an athlete. Slender legs which even yet move with that peculiar soft tread mark him as a former jockey.

He is delightfully informal too. During his speech he kept the top button of his light coat closed but as he came off the platform the reason was apparent. His vest was wide open.

"It's too hot to be a well dressed man," he laughed. His tie was loosely done and the neckband of his shirt was open.

"You have to give him credit. He knows when it's hot enough to have some sense," said a farmer, loosening his own stiff collar.

The interior walls and shelves are finished in ivory colored enamel, the floor covered with linoleum and rows of individual leather stuffed chairs add much to the attractiveness of the interior.

The lighting system is another big improvement and of the drop dome type.

Mr. Green has made heavy purchases of new fall stock in both the Walk-Over, Florsheim and Enna Jet-jack shoes which will be on display for approval at the opening tomorrow.

GEORGE SCHOOL HEADMASTER, IN ADDRESS HERE, TELLS BOYS WHAT GIFTS WILL BE THEIRS AS THEY ENTER COLLEGE CLASSES

George Walton Gives Talk to Young Men Who Will Enter College Halls for First Time This Fall—All Are Guests of Rotary Club at Weekly Luncheon

Yesterday the Bristol Rotary Club has as guests those boys from this section who this year will enter college for the first time. The boys were entertained at dinner in the Elk's Home. Following the serving of the menu the address of the afternoon was made by Prof. George A. Walton, headmaster of George School, Newtown.

Dr. Walton gives a very instructive talk to the young men and at its conclusion he was warmly congratulated upon his discourse.

Mr. Walton spoke of a number of things that are going to happen to the young men entering college this fall. "Each one will get a present, costing considerable money, collected from his friends and neighbors, from people in neighboring towns and cities, from men of large wealth and from endowments established long ago by generous men of means. No college student pays the full cost of his education. At the University of Pennsylvania the receipts from tuition constitute about 45 per cent of the cost of its educational activities. The balance is made up from the income of the endowment, State appropriation, private benefaction, and other sources. The exemption of school and college property from taxation is an important item.

"We have not combined our resources to give the young men of America this present to make them feel happy as parents give their little children a birthday present. We are not giving them this present to express our affection as a young man gives his sweetheart a platinum ring. This present is given to the young men entering college because we know that we need the service of educated men in business, in professions, in government, and in rearing the next generation.

"Another big thing that will happen in colleges will be the assigning of lessons to study. This is a great sifting process, separating the wheat from the chaff, the sheep from the goats. Some will study these lessons; others will not. There is a popular opinion abroad that the studying of lessons in college is of secondary importance. This popular opinion has been proved to be wrong. Whenever a careful investigation is made into the earning power of college men, it proves to be true that on the whole the men with high marks are earning more than the men with low marks. The matter has been investigated both from the standpoint of financial returns and the confidence and respect of the community. The latest investigation to be recorded was made by President Clifford of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, who said, "The big law firms seek the high-mark men from the law schools. The profession believes that the man who stands well in his law studies will make a better lawyer than one who does not. The hospitals take the same attitude toward medical students. A man with low marks in the medical school is not likely to get an appointment in the best hospitals; for it is the experience of the medical profession that those who stand well in the professional school are more likely to stand well in their profession later on. It is clear, however, that in the Bell System, on the average, men who were good students have done better than those who were not. There is a direct relation between high marks in college and salaries afterward in the Bell System."

"In our list of things that will happen to the young men entering college we must also mention that many of them will lose sleep. The comic paper uttered a great truth when it printed this wise crack, "The greatest college faculty is going without sleep." It is amazing how the college men and women of America punish themselves in this respect. One reads with wonder of a method once used in China (Continued on Page Four)

AUTO TOUR OUTLINED IS EXCEPTIONAL ONE

A Trip to Land Where Gaelic and French are Accepted
Languages

HAS NATURAL BEAUTY

A trip to the land where Gaelic and French are accepted languages, is offered this week by the Keystone Automobile Club. The tour will take you to a country in the extreme eastern section of the American continent, Cape Breton Island, a land unspoiled by the effects of modern civilization.

"Many motorists," said Russell B. Carby, representative of the Keystone Automobile Club in Bristol, "take trips in the northern fastnesses of this great continent. However, this island is one beautiful spot that has scarcely been explored.

"Here the motorist will see a people who have not the tricks usually found in resort districts. They will invite you into their homes, and serve you the same fare that they are used to eating."

From Bristol pass thru Langhorne, Newtown and Buckingham to Doylestown. From Doylestown follow the Lackawanna Trail north to Easton, the Delaware Water Gap and East Stroudsburg. Here the Milford Pike is met. Pass through Milford to Port Jervis on the New York state line.

Take the right hand fork and drive through Slate Hill toward Middletown. Two miles outside of Slate Hill, turn right to Goshen. Continue straight through to Monroe and Bear Mountain bridge. Near Monroe there is some construction, but the motorists will hardly be delayed by it.

Cross Bear Mountain bridge to Peckskill and drive to Danbury. From Danbury drive through Newton, Southbury and Middlebury to Waterbury. Continue eastward to Meriden, turn left and drive 18 miles to Hartford. Continue north to Springfield on the Boston Post Road and turn right to Worcester. Pass on to Weston, and bear left on the by-pass around Boston. Bear left onto the Newburyport Turnpike.

Drive north along the Atlantic coastline through Portsmouth, Portland, Brunswick, Rockland and Belfast to Bangor, Maine. Bear right through Ellsworth and continue through Machias, Calais and St. Andrews to St. John.

Pass through Sussex to Moncton and turn right to Amherst. From Amherst drive to Truro and drive on through New Glasgow and Antigonish to Miqigau. Here you take the ferry from Miqigau to Port Hawkesbury, on Cape Breton Island.

Many tourists after driving to this island, abandon their machines and take the famous motorboat trip through the chain of lakes that runs through the interior. We leave it to the tourists how long they will stay in this section.

For the return trip it is suggested that the same route be used.

NEW TRAFFIC LAW IN N. J. IS EFFECTIVE TOMORROW

Code Regulates Pedestrians
As Well as Motorists, and Rules are Given

INCREASES THE SPEED

Bristol motorists traveling through New Jersey on and after tomorrow should make themselves familiar with the new traffic code which becomes effective tonight at midnight. A number of new features affect the pedestrian and the speed of automobiles.

At intersections where traffic is not controlled pedestrians must cross at right angles to the curb and, except when they use the crosswalk, they must yield the right of way to vehicles on the street.

At all crossings where traffic is not controlled pedestrians have the right of way over vehicles.

The new speed limits are: Ten miles an hour when passing a school; fifteen miles on curves and on grades when driver's view is obstructed within distance of 100 feet; twenty miles where traffic is controlled, and in all residential districts; fifteen miles in business districts where traffic is not controlled; forty miles in open country.

Coasting down hill in neutral is prohibited.

It will be unlawful for any person to stand in the roadway for the purpose of soliciting a ride from motorists.

MORRISVILLE MAN KILLED; STRUCK BY FREAK LIGHTNING

Frank Linn Victim of Bolt
Which Also Killed
Race Horse

BURNED ON THE CHEEK

Fatal Charge Hits Stable At Treaton Fair Grounds

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 31.—During the electrical storm here early last night a freak bolt of lightning killed a man and a valuable racing horse, and damaged a stable at the Trenton Fair Grounds.

The victim was Frank "Sunny" Linn, 35 years old, of Morrisville, who was employed by John W. Lewis, of North Pennsylvania Avenue, Morrisville, to look after two horses which were entered in races to be held next Monday.

The lightning struck one corner of the racing stable, tearing away some of the woodwork, passed around the corner and damaged a sulky that had been left outside. Ten feet away Linn was about to close the door of the stable when he was struck by the bolt, which then passed into the building and killed the horse in the first stall. The other animal in the next stall was not harmed.

William Holmes, Negro caretaker for the horses of Anthony Schenckmann, of Hillwood Lakes, which were in an adjoining stable; John Dempsey, of Johnston avenue, and William Turner, of Smith avenue, who were visiting the fair grounds, saw Linn fall after the flash and ran to his side. Dempsey and Turner placed him in their automobile and rushed him to St. Francis Hospital, where he was pronounced dead on arrival. The Enterprise Fire Company was summoned, but the building had not been set on fire.

Coroner Appleget and County Physician Mitchell examined the body and found that Linn received burns about the right cheek, shoulder and chest. The body was later taken to Kemp's morgue.

Linn, who was unmarried, has a sister living in either Yardley or Bristol. Until Wednesday he had been in the employ of John Margerum, of Morrisville, caring for horses at the Doylestown track.

On that day Lewis brought two racers from Doylestown to Trenton and Linn came here with them. The dead horse was valued at about $1,200.

Officer Fred Skirm, of the Hamilton Township police, detailed officers to the Fair Grounds to make an investigation. An ambulance of the township police was also sent to the scene, but its services were not needed.

The storm was not a very heavy one in this section and no damage was reported from nearby towns.

LAGGING IN AVIATION

Pennsylvania is far behind her usual tenth in the proportion of the nation's progress, when it comes to a count of civilian-owned aircraft in the United States.

A census conducted by the department of commerce at Washington discloses 4,134 balloons, airplanes and airships privately owned. California has more than 600 of these. New York's flying machine population is 387. Pennsylvania is far down the list with 210 planes, trailing Illinois, Michigan, Texas and Ohio, as well as California and New York.

Pennsylvania's topography partly accounts for her backwardness in this field. The state is too uniformly mountainous for civilian flying. And the limited areas less rough in character are too densely populated and extensively cultivated for widespread plane ownership.

Airmail fliers and transcontinental planes encounter the most dangerous flying conditions above the Allegheny mountains of Pennsylvania. Several airmail pilots have lost their lives in the storms and fogs met there and two fliers attempting a non-stop flight from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic were balked by Pennsylvania fogs within two hundred miles of their goal.

But aviation is developing in this state in spite of the natural obstacles. Civilian flying clubs are being formed in many communities. Cities and towns are providing landing fields. And flying is becoming popular with business men and in fashionable circles.

PENNSYLVANIA GROWS

The census bureau at Washington estimates Pennsylvania's population gain since January 1, 1920, as 1,133,983. Only July 1, of this year, the state's population was 9,854,000, according to the bureau's calculations.

If these figures are accurate, Pennsylvania has 12 per cent more people than it had eight years ago. That means an annual jump of one and one-half per cent. The figure 1,133,983 takes on added significance when compared with the nation's increase in population over the same period. Since 1920 the United States has added 14,302,380 to its population. More than one-fourteenth of the nation's growth was in Pennsylvania.

Behind the state's remarkable growth in population is an equally remarkable growth industrially. The state has been able to assimilate more than a million new workers because its development has not been in population alone.

The Keystone state has not attained its full stature, although other states envious of her leadership charge that against her. There is room for still more millions in this state and they are coming. Pennsylvania will not lose her pre-eminence in industry and commerce and her high position in agriculture.

After spending two months at Camp Buccoo, New Jersey, Charles Carter has returned to his home here and gives a very good account of the work done by the scouts during the summer. He returns all brown and husky from his active labors at log cabin building, storekeeping and as canine leader, and now has 12 merit badges to show for his interest in the work.

One day recently several families joined forces and held a community dinner at the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Kenning.

George School Headmaster Tells Boys of Their Gifts As They Enter College

to torture criminals by beating drums and hitting them with sticks and keep them awake. What an outcry there would be if these young people were compelled to do with so little sleep. Next to neglect of lessons, loss of sleep is the biggest factor in college failures.

"Another thing to happen to the young men in college is the free use of spending money, often for the first time in their experience. Many college men are extravagant and receive large sums of spending money from indulgent parents. Every freshman will be tempted to live beyond his income and it is well to recognize that money has value only because someone has labored. When money is used thoughtlessly in gambling and other forms of riotous living, it wastes the product of hard labor and is grossly unfair to people who have to work.

"The freshmen will also face the temptation to drink intoxicating liquor. Every college, sad to say, has its bootlegger. Parents have no other course than to rely on their son's sense of right and wrong, but both parents and entering freshmen must recognize the fact that liquor drinking in colleges is on the decline as compared with ten and twenty years ago. One does not prove this by attempting exact statistics; such cannot be produced. The personal habits of college men are not matters of record. College students and officers, however, know what is going on in their own institutions. Pains have been taken to collect from all colleges in the land the observations of those likely to know the situation best and as reported in the Literary Digest for July 16 and 17, 1926, there is overwhelming evidence that liquor is a much less prominent and influential factor in college life now than a generation ago. Those who do drink are a conspicuous element, noisy, and idle. They thrust themselves upon the public eye, but it is well for every entering freshman to remember that each year they are less and less typical of college life. The up-to-date college man does not drink.

"Lastly freshmen should realize that they will be treated as freshmen. Just why a freshman should be concealed is hard to understand. Yet many an incoming student enters college feeling that great days are at hand for his chosen alma mater. The home town and home high school are a small world; a prominent record at home means nothing in college. Nothing counts there but the qualities of manhood as they are found in one's own personality. Few freshmen really know how to study. They are mostly ignorant of how money is made and life supported even in their own homes, few understand the efforts and self-sacrifice of their own parents, they have seen little of the quiet heroism of daily life, nor do they know of the intensity of the struggle to maintain our present civilization. The one insufferable thing in a freshman is self-conceit and every one from the oldest professor to the youngest sophomore will strike it. The first assignment of lessons will be selected to shock the freshmen out of their conceit.

"Consider for a moment what men get out of a college course. It is not possible in four brief years to learn all that one needs to know for the daily needs of one's business or profession. Fortunate is the college man who learns how to learn, to see clearly the problem before him, to collect, organize and apply the necessary facts. The man who can do this in connection with his college studies can do it with the problems presented in his business and professional life."

In conclusion the speaker asked a few questions which the knowledge and skill of the present generation of leaders cannot successfully answer. "A right answer to these questions is essential to the continuance of a prosperous and happy civilization. How can we arrange things that essential businesses, such as coal mining, oil production, and agriculture can produce and distribute with a reasonable profit so that the average consumer can afford to buy? The freshman who can work out the best answer to that question will be President."

How can we decrease the danger in automobile traffic and in a few years' time, how can we make air traffic safe?

How can we utilize the full power value of coal?

How can we measure the capacity and taste of the human mind accurately enough to forecast for young men the field of greatest possible success?

How can we prevent floods?

How can we utilize the power of the tide?

How can growing boys and girls be so influenced as to prevent the development of criminal tendencies?

How can we save ourselves the waste and degradation connected with the use of alcoholic drinks?

How can we prevent war from destroying the accumulated labor of many decades and eventually destroying our civilization?

How can we get rid of the Japanese Beetle?

"None of these questions will ever be solved by the well meaning endeavors of uneducated men. None of these questions will ever be solved by the wisdom and experience accumulated in serving as the head of George School or making a living in Bristol. They require the leadership of the ablest men of highest character and with the finest educational training. Because the community wants these problems solved it makes every college boy a present by paying part of his expense."

4 PERILED BY GAS
ESCAPE ON ROOF

Man and Wife Save Two Babies When Refrigerator Leak Drives Them Out

Explosion of gas in a refrigerator early today endangered the lives of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Karabell, 2709 South 70th street, and their two daughters, Marian, 2, and Judith, 1.

The Karabells operate a small store and the refrigerator is in the rear on the first floor. The family was asleep on the second floor. Mrs. Karabell was awakened at 2:30 a. m. by gas fumes.

She awakened her husband and they carried the children to the stairway, but found the gas so strong that they were forced to abandon that avenue of escape. Karabell then removed a screen from a window in the front of the house, helped his wife out onto the porch roof and lifted the children out after her. The children were suffering from the gas they had inhaled.

Karabell awakened Joseph Souders, who lives next door at 2702 South 70th street, and Souders admitted Karabell and his wife and children to his home through a window. Karabell notified the fire department and firemen wearing gas masks got into Karabell's house and shut off the refrigerator.—(Evening Public Ledger.)

farmers the greatest era of prosperity in their history. And he will be seconded by Senator Charles Curtis, the man who has helped solve the outstanding legislative problems of the last 33 years, and knows how to handle Congress as well as any man in history.

One section of the Democratic platform which is the nominee of that party does stand by is that dealing with the tariff. It is worth noting that neither in the platform nor the Smith acceptance speech, however, does the word "protection" appear. There are many who question whether the new pot-pourri of promises offered by the Democrats in the tariff plank can ever be as beneficial to the nation as the Republican protective tariff policy has proved for the last seventy years.

Although she was known to circus crowds as Jolly Trixie for the majority of her 44 years of life, she was known here as Mary Jane Hendrickson. It was to this little town that her body was brought and laid to rest.

For years she laughed her way into the hearts of both performers and audiences as the fun-making fat lady of various circuses and carnivals. Wherever she went laughter, joyous, rolicking laughter, followed her and her friends say that she truly lived up to her pseudonym of Jolly Trixie.

State News

GREENSBURG, Pa., Aug. 31—(INS)—General Braddock's march across Westmoreland county in 1755 while en route to Fort Duquesne has been memorialized by a marker in the form of a bronze tablet.

The tablet was placed at the point where the general crossed the county. This point is now known as the route from Spring street in Mount Pleasant to the old Mount Pleasant pike and then out to the McAdams farm north-west of the present town of Mount Pleasant.

The memorial was erected by John L. Ruth, vice-president of the People's National Bank, and Miss Emma Miller, formerly employed at the Mount Pleasant post office.

SMETHPORT, Pa., Aug. 31—(INS)—Jolly Trixie, symbols of all the glamour and laughter that surrounds life in circuses and carnivals, is dead. She succumbed recently in Erie following a prolonged illness growing out of an operation more than a year ago.

AMBRIDGE, Pa., Aug. 31—(INS)—Another historical site, once a monument to communistic enterprise, has given way to modern progress and industrial development with the announcement by J. D. Hillman, Jr., of the Hillman Coal and Coke Company, of Pittsburgh, that the Hillman interests have acquired a stretch of land lying to the east and north of Ambridge.

This land is the remnant of the 3,000 acres once owned by the Harmony Society, organized in Germany about 1800 and which settled at Harmony, Pa., in 1804. The society removed to New Harmony, Ind., but in 1823 returned to Pennsylvania and settled at Economy, now the fourth ward of Ambridge. Here it flourished, grew, and decayed, being dissolved in 1905.

At one time this pioneer communistic enterprise was regarded as the most successful of its kind. It was so successful and flourished to such a degree that Congress was once petitioned to dissolve the community as a menace to commerce in general.

The community furnished a large share of the capital with which to build the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad, of which Father Henrici, then head of the society, was vice-president. J. S. Duss was its last trustee.

The Political Parade

(By HARRY BLACKMON)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 31—The return of Mr. Hoover to Washington is not expected to terminate his campaign touring by any means. A number of cities are clamoring for visits, and while the Republican nominee has accepted no invitations, he is known to be considering several speaking trips.

Reports from New York regarding the uncertainty of the Democratic candidate about a country-wide speaking tour indicate that the final decision in that case is also up to Mr. Hoover. If he decides to make a number of speeches in the east and the border states, his rival may be expected to do likewise. Somehow this campaign seems to pivot around Herbert Hoover.

Another indication of Herbert Hoover's capacity to rise to any occasion is found in the evidence of a nationwide desire to hear more from him. There was a time, not so long ago, when some of his closest friends thought that Mr. Hoover's comparative inexperience as a political speaker would prove a severe handicap in a national campaign. The first two samples of his oratory have created a tremendous demand, and that is usually the best test of worth for any product.

With both acceptance speeches part of the campaign record, Herbert Hoover offers agriculture a definite program for working out of its marketing difficulties, while Governor Smith reviews what the Republican party has already done and promises that he will do something else, but he gives no idea of what that will be.

Hoover's ability to solve puzzling problems dates back some time, according to those who attended college with him at Stanford University thirty-odd years ago. Professor Henry Davidson Sheldon, who was one of them, recalls the nominee's election to the first political office he ever held, that of treasurer of the student body.

"As treasurer," says Professor Sheldon, "Hoover worked out an efficient financial system, which enabled the student body to rid itself of debt and stand on its own feet. Before he took charge, the various athletic teams and the Glee Club had been fast losing money, but he put them on a paying basis in a short time."

Another old-line Democratic newspaper, the Chattanooga News, has announced that it will support Hoover and Curtis.

"Party loyalty is a dual matter," says the News. "The candidate must be loyal to party principles in order to expect the loyalty of party members. * * * Governor Smith has conspicuously transgressed the party platform and Democrats as such can be under no further obligation to him."

Cooperation in improving the farmer's condition may as well begin at the top. The election of Hoover and Curtis will put agricultural relief up to the man who has successfully worked out a number of the greatest administrative problems of his generation, has helped business save billions every year through new methods of eliminating waste and simplifying production, savings which were shared with workers—and who gave the
